

Catechism of the Crisis in the Church The New Mass

- Isn't "Eucharistic Prayer II" very old?

"Eucharistic Prayer II" does deserve a special mention for, as has been written, "a priest who no longer believed in either Transubstantiation or the sacrificial character of the Mass could recite it with perfect tranquility of conscience," and "a Protestant minister...could use it in his own celebrations just as well." Not once does the notion of sacrifice occur, yet it is the most often used because it passes for ancient and venerable, and especially because it is the shortest of the four (it has been nicknamed the "mini-canon").

- Isn't this Eucharistic Prayer II the Canon of St. Hippolytus (third century)?

Some claim that this prayer is the ancient canon of Hippolytus, but: 1) at best, it would only be a truncated version of that canon (the passage affirming that Christ voluntarily gave Himself up to suffering in order to "destroy death, to break the bonds of the devil, to trample hell underfoot, and to enlighten the just" has, for example, been suppressed); and 2) it is forgotten that Hippolytus was the second antipope, and that it is not at all certain that his liturgy was ever celebrated in the Catholic Church.

- But isn't this Hippolytus a saint?

Father Roguet, who cannot be suspected of hostility towards the new liturgy, explains: Hippolytus does not give his text as a canon, that is to say a fixed, obligatory rule, but rather as a model for improvisation; his text, then, was probably never pronounced as written. Lastly, he was a very reactionary character, so opposed to the Roman hierarchy as to play the antipope (which he redeemed by martyrdom) and it is highly likely that he presented his anaphora in opposition to the Eucharistic prayer then in use by Rome.

- What are the consequences of the deficiencies of these new Eucharistic prayers?

Fr. Calmel remarked: As a result of these alterations and manipulations, the inexhaustible but well-defined riches of the consecratory rite are no longer suitably set forth. The interior dispositions required for receiving the supernatural fruits of the holy sacrifice are no longer fostered as they ought to be. The unavoidable consequences seem to be that priests and the laity cease to perceive the significance of the Mass, and the Catholic Mass more closely resembles the Protestant Supper.
