19) When are the bishops infallible?

The bishops are infallible in two cases: 1) When they solemnly proclaim a truth of faith in an ecumenical council in union with the pope, their supreme head. All the ancient ecumenical councils proclaimed the truths of faith in this manner. It is important, then, that the pope approve these decisions, even if it is not necessary that he be present at the council himself. A council the decrees of which were not ratified by the pope could not be considered infallible. 2) The bishops are equally infallible when, dispersed throughout the world, they unanimously teach a truth as belonging to the deposit of faith. This is the case for the articles of faith in general which have for a long time been taught everywhere in the Church without having been subject to doubt.

• How are these two modes of episcopal infallibility designated?

1) An infallible affirmation made by the pope or a council is called a solemn judgment; it is an act of the Church's extraordinary magisterium; 2) the infallible transmission of the faith by the bishops dispersed throughout the world is called, on the contrary, the ordinary and universal magisterium (sometimes abbreviated OUM).

• Is not one mode of infallibility sufficient? Why are there two?

Normally, the common teaching of the bishops (the OUM) is sufficient for knowing with certitude the truths of faith. But in times of crisis, when the bishops disagree among themselves or simply fail to use their authority to reiterate revealed truth, then it is no longer possible to have recourse to this criterion. To resolve the crisis, an extraordinary act of the magisterium is required, that is, a solemn judgment pronounced by a council or by the pope.

• Can you give us an example?

All Christians firmly believed in the real presence of the Body and Blood of our Lord in the sacrament of the Eucharist long before it was solemnly defined. It was taught throughout the whole Church as a truth of faith. Nevertheless, the denial of this truth by the Protestants made its solemn definition by the Council of Trent necessary. In fact, the attacks of heretics are often the occasion for the Church to solemnly define a truth.
